

For Your Information: Your Right to Complain About Services

Your Right to Complain to a Children's Aid Society or Indigenous Children's Aid Society (Society)

If you have a question or concern about services from a society, you can talk to the worker who is helping you, the worker's supervisor, or someone else at the society. If you do not want to first speak to them or if speaking to your worker or others at the society does not answer your questions, you have the right to start a formal process to complain to the society at any time. Societies are required by law to establish an Internal Complaints Review Panel (ICRP) to review formal complaints submitted in writing. Your society may also offer alternate complaints processes (e.g. an Elders Forum).

Under section 119 of the Child, Youth and Family Services Act, 2017 (CYFSA), you have a right to complain to a society relating to a service you have sought or received from that society. A formal complaint must be made in writing using this form.

Complaints relating to an issue decided by a court or that is subject to another decision-making process under the CYFSA or the Labour Relations Act, 1995 are not eligible for review (for example, a decision by the court placing a child in society care would not be eligible).

The first step in the formal complaint process is to complete this Formal Complaint to a Society's Internal Complaints Review Panel (ICRP) Form.

What to Expect After You Complete and Submit This Form

1. Your complaint will be reviewed by the society within 7 days to determine whether it is eligible for review. The society is required to provide you with a written response to notify you that either:
 - Your complaint is not eligible for review and the reasons why, or;
 - Your complaint is eligible and will be reviewed by the ICRP, and you will be provided with a date and time for a meeting.
2. If your complaint is eligible for review, the ICRP will meet with you in person at a time that is convenient for you and the members of the panel within 14 days after you have received the response from the ICRP, or later if you request it.
3. Within 14 days after the meeting, the ICRP will send you a written summary of the meeting, including any agreed upon next steps.

Your worker may be made aware of your complaint as part of the society's review of the complaint.

What is the Internal Complaints Review Panel (ICRP)?

The panel will consist of a small number of people who have not been directly involved with your case. The society's Executive Director will select panel members, including one senior manager from the society, and will also choose one person external to the society but who may be a member of the society's board of directors. You will be able to discuss your complaint with people who are not directly involved with your case. The goal is to deal with your complaint as quickly as possible in a way that works for everyone. An interpreter may be provided by the society if you need one. You can bring one person to support you at the meeting. A representative from each of your bands or First Nations, Inuit or Métis communities may also attend if appropriate.

Your Right to Complain to Other Bodies

Depending on the subject matter of your complaint, you can submit a complaint to the following:

When to Complain to the Child and Family Services Review Board (CFSRB)

You do not always need to go through the society's Internal Complaints Review Panel process before complaining to the CFSRB. In most situations, you can file a complaint with the CFSRB directly and follow their steps on how to proceed. You may submit a complaint directly to the CFSRB (under section 119 and 120 of the CYFSA) for reasons including:

- A society does not proceed with your written complaint;
- A society does not respond to your written complaint within the required timeframe;
- A society does not comply with the formal complaint review procedure or with any other procedural requirement under the CYFSA about the review of complaints;
- A society does not comply with their requirement under the CFYSA to ensure children and their parents have an opportunity, where appropriate, to be heard and represented when decisions affecting their interests are being made and heard when they have concerns about services they are receiving; or
- A society does not provide you with reasons for a decision that affects your interests, excluding decisions relating to requests for accessing or correcting a record of your personal information (see Information and Privacy Commissioner information below).

For more information and to complain to the CFSRB, you must fill out the CFSRB's form, which you can get here:

When to Complain to The Ombudsman

As of May 1, 2019, the Ombudsman's office is responsible for investigating complaints about services provided by children's aid societies and residential licensees to children and youth. You may complain to the Ombudsman at any time about your concerns.

The Ombudsman may investigate any matter concerning a child with respect to a children's aid society service. The Ombudsman may also investigate any matter concerning a child or young person with respect to a service provided by a residential licensee, including:

- a service provided by a residential licensee to a child placed with the licensee by a children's aid society or other entity
- a service provided by a residential licensee to a child committed to a secure treatment program
- a service provided by a residential licensee to a young person who is detained or committed to custody under the Youth Criminal Justice Act or the Provincial Offences Act.

As of May 2019, the Ombudsman may also investigate matters related to French language services. As of May 2019 you may complain to the Ombudsman at any time when you believe that your right to be served in French was not respected.

For more information and to complain to the Ombudsman, you must fill out the Ombudsman's form, which you can get here: <https://www.ombudsman.on.ca/have-a-complaint/make-a-complaint>

When to Complain to the Office of the Information and Privacy Commissioner (IPC)

The IPC acts independently of the government to oversee Ontario's access to information and protection of privacy laws. This includes Part X of the CYFSA, which applies to societies and other child and family service providers.

As of January 1, 2020, societies are required by Part X of the CYFSA to protect privacy and enable access to, and correction of, records of personal information in their custody or control related to the provision of a service.

Any person can make a complaint to the IPC if they believe a society is not complying with these requirements. For example, you could complain to the IPC if your privacy is breached (e.g., the society viewed or disclosed your records inappropriately) or if you are not satisfied with the society's response to your request for access or correction of your records. Complaints about compliance with Part X of the CYFSA should be made to the IPC and not through the society's internal complaints review process.

Please note that complaints about access and correction requests must be submitted to the IPC within six months after the society's response to your request (or failure to respond). All other complaints (for example, about a privacy breach) must be submitted within one year after the subject of the complaint first came (or should reasonably have come) to your attention.

To file a complaint with the IPC, you must fill out the appropriate IPC form for access/correction or privacy complaints about a child and family service provider, which you can get at www.ipc.on.ca.
